The relationship between magic and religion has been debated by anthropologists dating back to the 19th Century but a decision is yet to be reached as to whether there exists a fixed boundary between the two. E.B. Tylor and J. G. Frazer both conducted research into the separate nature of the two belief systems and came to the general conclusion that ' magic was not a false religion, but a different sort of activity altogether ' (REF1) and was in many ways seen to be in direct conflict with ...

Magical thinking in various forms is a cultural universal and an important aspect of religion. Magic is prevalent in all societies, regardless of whether they have organized religion or more general systems of animism or shamanism. Religion and magic became conceptually separated with the development of western monotheism, where the distinction arose between supernatural events sanctioned by mainstream religious doctrine and magic rooted in folk belief or occult speculation. In pre-monotheistic

All major religions teach goodness, selflessness and love as the ultimate goals. No religion preaches violence of any kind, especially not for achieving material wealth or social status. But magic can be directed at these goals. Magic is therefore morally neutral, while religion is inherently good.
