BSA D14 Bantam. The BSA Bantam (1948-1971) was by far the longest running motorcycle model produced by the Birmingham based company. This was because, unlike the 4-stroke motorcycles produced that went from side valve to overhead valve and from pre-unit to unit construction models over that timescale, the 2-stroke Bantam engine remained largely the same other than increasing in capacity from 125 cc to 175 cc and eventually acquiring a 4-speed gearbox.

Virtually the last throw of the dice came with a trio of further uprated 175cc models in 1968/9 – the D14/4 Supreme, D14/4 Sports and D14/4 Bushman. With an improved combustion chamber design, the engine was stretched to its limit with the application of yet more tuning and an even higher compression ratio, pushing the power output to 13bhp but compromising reliability.

On the ever diminishing market for British motorcycles, BSA sought to make the Bantam yet more powerful. They increased the compression ratio to 10:1, resulting in a power increase to 13 h.p. The bike would now shift along at the best part of 70 m.p.h, the market had changed from wanting the fuel-efficient three speed D1, to the speedy D14/4.
