2008 Cannondale CAAD9 R5 I bought this as my first road bike for $1,200 on sale ($1,500 out the door with pedals, shoes, bottle cages, and tax). This bike climbs, accelerates, turns, and brakes with ease. Hills seem flat. It handles like a dream at all speeds. Power transfer is unbelievable.

The new CAAD10 is the world's most advanced aluminum road frame. At just 1150 grams for a 56 cm frame, the CAAD10 is lighter, stiffer and smoother than most of our competitors' elite carbon frames. 1)SUPERLIGHT CAAD10 FORK. Housed in our externally machined, tapered head tube, the 390 gram, 1-1/8" to 1-1/4" tapered carbon steerer fork features offset dropouts, allowing more fork angle for vertical compliance without affecting the razor-sharp handling.

I am buying a bike, hopefully by this weekend. I have narrowed down the candidates to the cannondale Synapse and the Allez Elite. Cannondale Synapse 6-1 I like this bike because, from what I can tell, it has a high quality frame (for the price range of $1100) and has a decent wheelset. Feels good, eliminates road buzz ect Allez Elite- I like it.

Specialized Allez Elite (105 group set) Cannondale CAAD Optimo 105 I will be riding leisurely (20-30 miles) and in mostly goo weather conditions. I would likely upgrade the rim brakes on the Specialized to Shimano 105's but I'm unsure if then CAAD Optimo would benefit from the upgrade.
