The OECD and South East Europe. The OECD has been working with South East Europe (SEE) since 2000 to ensure peace, stability and prosperity in a region weakened by conflict, but endowed with rich resources and dynamism. Governments, business leaders and civil society have worked together under the leadership of the OECD to meet economic challenges, including weathering the global economic and financial crisis and preparing for European Union accession.

Eastern Europe expansion. South Eastern Europe is seeing strong economic growth, which is leading to expansion in building construction, but while Ukraine is expecting positive figures, Russia and Turkey are looking flat, a new report has found. EECFA (Eastern European Construction Forecasting Association) – the forecasting association conducting research on the construction markets of eight Eastern European countries – has released its 2018 summer construction forecast reports up to 2020.
