Handloaders are by and large creatures of habit, following a fairly strict routine with each cartridge, bullet or powder. The “process” helps to avoid unforeseen problems that might result in excess pressure with self-ejecting primers or little or no powder in the case, which usually means the end of the day at the range to go home and prod the stuck bullet out of the bore.

Can't say for sure, but I can give you some information. I looked up the Apex Model in the 16th edition of Handloader's Digest/1997. The models they list are the Hornady Apex 3.1 Auto (a progressive), and the Hornady Apex 3.1 Standard (a single stage). That means your 3.0 press is older than these.
