The Rhesus Macaques Monkeys aren't the closest human relative, so you should expect an exact replica of human behavior. The Rhesus Macaques is close enough and simple enough that observing their behavior can inform assumptions about human behavior.
Their strategies are simple enough that scientists like Dario Maestriperi are able to interpret them.

"Rhesus monkeys and humans are highly successful survivors in a complex and sometimes cruel world. Macchiavellian Intelligence, a good read about the nitty-gritty details of how rhesus monkeys make it, tells us a lot about ourselves. It's often not a pretty picture to read about manipulative social opportunism, but if we ignore the important message of this book we, not the monkeys or other animals, will be the big losers."

The product of more than twenty years studying these fascinating creatures, Macchiavellian Intelligence caricatures a society that is as much human as monkey, with hierarchies and power struggles that would impress Machiavelli himself. High-status macaques, for instance, maintain their rank through deft uses of violence and manipulation, while altruism is almost unknown and relationships are perpetually subject to the cruel laws of the market.

Is human behavior just a more sophisticated version of Rhesus Macaques behavior? Do we have the same motivations, just more complex strategies for achieving them? Maestriperi's portrays the Rhesus Macaques as hierarchical and selfish. When Rhesus Macaques compete for power is direct and often physical.
