The Phil Harris-Alice Faye Show, was a comedy radio program which ran on NBC from 1948 to 1954 starring Alice Faye and Phil Harris. Harris had previously become known to radio audiences as the band leader-turned-cast-member of the same name on The Jack Benny Program while Faye had been a frequent guest on programs such as Rudy Vallée's variety shows. After becoming the breakout stars of the music and comedy variety program The Fitch Bandwagon, the show was retooled into a full situation comedy.

By 1948, Fitch was replaced as sponsor by Roxall, the pharmaceutical company, and the show, now a strictly situation comedy with a music interlude each from husband and wife, was renamed The Phil Harris-Alice Faye Show. Harris's comic talent was already familiar through his tenure on Jack Benny's radio shows for Jell-o and Lucky Strike. From 1936 to 1952, he played Benny's wisecracking, jive-talking, hipster bandleader.

There's nothing like The Phil Harris-Alice Faye Show, radio's best-written situation comedy -- and here's ten full hours to prove it! The show's sense of the absurd, its anything-goes anarchy, is as sharp and funny today as it was seventy years ago! In addition to Phil and Alice's considerable charms, Elliott Lewis co-stars as left handed guitar player Frankie Remley, with Walter Tetley as mouthy teenager Julius Abruzzo.
