The "art of living dangerously" is their response to the conceptual resignation of a brutish journey to an unavoidable, dismal end. By cultivating an awareness of the oppressive and totalizing nature of resiliency concept and its entailments that imprisons our humanity, we can push back and resist this grim, dominant discourse and imagine new, emergent, and creative alternatives.

The Resilient. The resilient, or robust, don't care if circumstances become volatile or disruptive (up to a point). They remain steady in times of both adversity and tranquility. Taleb likens resiliency to the mythical Phoenix. The Phoenix, if you remember, is an immortal bird that dies by fire and is reborn from its ashes to its initial state.
