Sarah Morgan The Civil War

Sarah Morgan's diary describes the events of the Civil War witnessed by and understood through the eyes of a nineteen-year-old girl. Her diary joins the testimonies and diaries of others during the war, such as Mary Chesnut's published diary. However, unlike Mary Chesnut, who was twenty years older and more political, Sarah Morgan captures the emotion and sometimes contradictory feelings of young woman during the war.

20. Because of her wealth, she was keenly aware of social status, but soon learned that the war demanded a greater degree of tolerance than antebellum period. Her own family became divided, as some broke from regional loyalty to support the North. When Yankees captured New Orleans in 1862, Morgan was first impressed with civility of the Union officers, but when Baton Rouge experienced the same fate, her attitude changed dramatically.
