~~Synopsis. First published in 1957, with a slight update in 1964, this classic text remains one of the standard works on the doctor-patient relationship (largely as found in general practice). This new edition provides an updated descriptive analysis of the doctor-patient relationship, with practical advice on the potential and limits to the doctors involvement with the patient.~~

~~The Doctor, his Patient and the Illness documents the case histories of several of these patients in detail, including their GPs' attempts at treatment, and the subsequent group discussions. Balint discusses several themes arising from the seminars, such as the idea of the doctor as "drug"—in particular how a doctor's actions influence how a patient responds to illness and treatment.~~

~~The doctor is providing medical advice to this patient. A physician performs a standard physical examination on his patient. A patient must have confidence in the competence of their physician and must feel that they can confide in him or her. For most physicians, the establishment of good rapport with a patient is important.~~

~~The patient and doctor are respectful of each other's expectations, point of view, and values. Some have argued that this is the most appropriate model for chronic illnesses, such as rheumatoid arthritis and lupus, where patients are responsible for implementing their treatment and determining its efficacy.~~

~~Today however there is a new alliance between the doctor and patient, based on co-operation rather than confrontation, in which the doctor must "understand the patient as a unique human being". 36 Thus patient-centered care has replaced a one-sided, doctor-dominated relationship in which the exercise of power distorts the decision-making process for both parties. Such an alliance must take into account not only the application of technical knowledge, but also communication of information ...~~

~~No doctor wants to breach their patient's trust; it's fundamental to the long-term, tailored healthcare and advice a GP provides day in, day out. But it's also our duty as doctors to advise our patients and always make a decision based on clinical grounds, even if at times we reach a decision the patient may disagree with.~~
