met with so little fanfare when it appeared four years ago.² Modern topic theory owes its beginnings to Leonard Ratner's seminal work, Classic Music (1980).
In a mere twenty pages, Ratner puts forth the revolutionary claim that eighteenth-century composers relied upon a lexicon connected to older ideas of hunting. The military topic, similarly, is ambiguously related to the military life of the period, though indicative of a heroic myth of soldiering. The pastoral topic is described in relation to the long cultural tradition of the pastoral. Each topic is illustrated from the music of all periods.
