"A Time for Dying" opens with a kid who wants to be a gunfighter. A lot of Westerns do. But this kid (played by Richard Lapp) is the goofiest kid I've ever seen in a Western. He has a squeaky voice, a nervous smile, a funny: haircut, and he overplays his good manners into an affectation.

A Time for Dying movie review (1982) | Roger Ebert

"A Time For Dying" is probably Boetticher's most playful delve into the Western genre, and is in contrast to the series of magnificent Westerns he made with Randolph Scott. In those films the hero is a grizzled veteran, who although extremely able is past his prime. The hero of this film however is youthful and immature.
